Sensex gains 107 points, Nifty back at 25,000, driven by falling oil prices and bank buying

The benchmark Sensex recorded a gain of 107 points, giving the Indian stock market a modest lift. At the same time the Nifty 50 crossed the important 25,000 level again, which had slipped earlier. Analysts say two main factors behind the rally are the decline in international oil prices and increased buying of bank stocks by investors. Lower oil prices have reduced costs for many companies, while improving fundamentals of banks have renewed investor interest in the sector. Market participants said both reasons have restored confidence after volatility, and the index direction will depend on further commodity prices and sectoral flows. Overall, the gain reflects positive sentiment among traders, while they watch monetary policy and global risk factors closely.

Veteran Baburam Rasayli stresses lifelong duty in Meghalaya

Meghalaya Monitor reported that veteran Baburam Rasayli repeated the slogan "once a soldier, always a soldier." The statement reflects his belief that the values and responsibilities of military service continue to influence a person's life after service ends. Rasayli made the remarks at a local gathering where veterans discussed post-service reintegration. He said the discipline, brotherhood and sense of duty acquired in the army are an integral part of his character. Rasayli's views align with the broader debate in Meghalaya on veteran welfare and their contribution to society. While he did not propose any specific policy, his comments highlighted the enduring bond between soldiers and the community. The Meghalaya Monitor presented this sentiment as a reminder that military service leaves a deep imprint on personal life. The veteran urged his comrades to stay active in social work, suggesting that their experience can positively strengthen local initiatives. His message resonated with the audience, demonstrating that a soldier's duty does not end with the uniform.

Meghalaya CM Inaugurates ₹9.26 Crore Farmer's Market in South Garo Hills for 3,000 Farmers

The Chief Minister of Meghalaya inaugurated a dedicated farmer's market in South Garo Hills, marking a significant investment in the region's agricultural infrastructure. Built at a cost of approximately ₹9.26 crore, the facility will provide farmers with a permanent location to display, sell, and trade their produce directly.

The market is designed to accommodate around 3,000 farmers, helping them achieve better prices and reduce their dependence on middlemen. State officials noted that the modern layout includes storage spaces, cold rooms, and basic amenities that will improve the supply chain.

The inauguration signals the Meghalaya government's broader initiative to strengthen rural economies and enhance market access for small farmers. Officials believe the new center will boost income, encourage the cultivation of high-value crops, and promote ancillary businesses in the region.

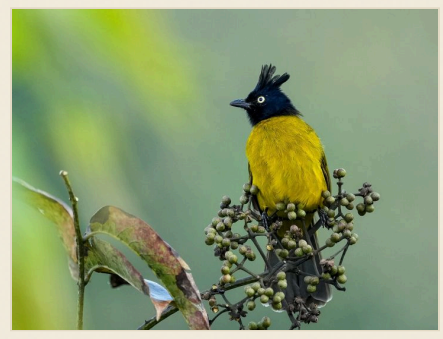
23 deaths recorded in 91 extreme weather events in Meghalaya in 2026



The Meghalaya Express reported that 91 extreme weather events were recorded in Meghalaya in 2026. These events, which included heavy rainfall and landslides, resulted in 23 deaths. State authorities have confirmed the death toll and are collecting detailed data on each incident to assess the overall impact on communities and infrastructure. Relief teams have been deployed to the most affected districts to provide emergency assistance and medical care. Officials warn that changing climate patterns could increase the frequency of such extreme events, urging residents to remain vigilant and follow safety advice issued by the disaster management department. The government has pledged to strengthen the disaster warning system and allocate additional resources for the rehabilitation of families who have lost loved ones in these disasters. Further updates will be provided as more information becomes available.

Meghalaya Chief Minister Opens Development Projects Worth 2.672 Crore Rupees in Chokpot

The Chief Minister of Meghalaya conducted a ceremony in Chokpot, inaugurating development projects valued at 26.72 crore rupees. The launch reflects the state's ongoing efforts to strengthen infrastructure and public services in the remote district. These projects are part of a comprehensive plan announced by the state government, aimed at enhancing connectivity, health facilities and livelihood opportunities for local communities. While specific details of the Chokpot projects were not disclosed, officials said they align with the state's long-term development roadmap. Meghalaya has allocated 941.48 crore rupees for a total of 92 projects. The launch in Chokpot added another step to this extensive programme, highlighting the administration's commitment to balanced regional development.

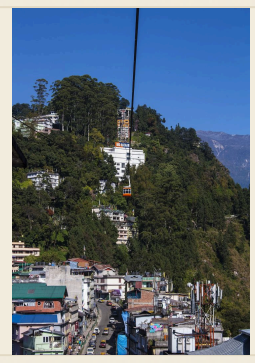
Maa Group Urges Meghalaya CM to Call JAC for Discussion on Shillong Ropeway



The Meghalaya Maa Forum sent a formal letter to Chief Minister K. Sangma, urging the convening of a Joint Action Committee (JAC) to discuss the Shillong Ropeway project. The group argues that involving a JAC representing key stakeholders is essential to resolve the technical and financial obstacles that have stalled the cable-car link, which aims to boost tourism and improve local connectivity.

In its appeal, the Maa group highlighted the project's impact on local communities and the need for transparent dialogue. They said that joint discussions would allow the ropeway design to be tailored to the needs of residents, especially women and children, who would benefit from better transport options.

The Chief Minister's office has yet to respond publicly. The ropeway, proposed several years ago, remains under review, and the state is seeking practical solutions that advance the project while addressing public concerns.

Mengipathar Railway Station Provides Meghalaya Farmers with Easier Access to Guwahati Markets

Mengipathar Railway Station, the first railhead in Meghalaya's Garo Hills region, was inaugurated this month and connected to the national rail network. The line links Mengipathar to Guwahati, a commercial hub in Assam, via broad-gauge tracks that traverse hilly terrain.

Local farmers, who previously relied on roads and often faced weather-related delays, can now transport their produce directly to Guwahati's wholesale markets. Rail transport has reduced travel time from several days to a few hours and lowered freight costs.

will enhance farmers' bargaining power and lead to better crop prices, as fresh vegetables, fruits, and horticultural products will reach the market in better condition. The rail line is also expected to encourage the development of supporting industries, such as cold storage and packaging, in the region.

Beyond agriculture, this new connection is part of broader efforts to integrate Meghalaya's economy with the rest of the country, boosting both tourism and trade. Initial reports indicate steady demand for passenger services, highlighting the station's role in regional development.

Frang Roy, a Meghalaya activist and prominent representative of indigenous communities, has formally demanded voting rights for indigenous representatives at the Global Pollination Platform. Roy argues that decisions related to pollinator protection directly impact traditional lands and livelihoods, and therefore indigenous people should have a say in policy-making.

The Global Pollination Platform, which brings together scientists, policymakers, and NGOs to work on halting the decline of pollinators, currently grants voting rights only to member states and accredited organizations. Roy's proposal calls for a dedicated seat for indigenous groups within the platform to recognize their experience in ecological conservation.

In a statement released to the media, Roy said that excluding the indigenous perspective diminishes the effectiveness of conservation measures. He urged the platform's secretariat to review its governance structure before the upcoming annual summit, where this issue is likely to be discussed.

made any public comment on the demand, but this move aligns with broader government commitments to recognizing indigenous rights in environmental decision-making. Experts believe that granting such voting rights could lead to similar changes in other international bodies.

Baiernihat, Meghalaya, Records AQI of 80 After Joint Pollution Control Measures

The Air Quality Index (AQI) in Baiernihat, Meghalaya, was recorded at 80 on Tuesday, according to the State Pollution Control Board. This figure indicates a clear improvement from levels that remained above 100 during the previous monsoon season.

The board attributed this decline to joint pollution control measures implemented by local authorities, which included strict enforcement of vehicle emission standards, a temporary ban on open burning, and public awareness campaigns on the health risks of poor air quality.

Officials stated that this collaborative effort involved the district administration, the local fire department, and community volunteers. The board will monitor the AQI daily for the next month to assess the long-term impact of the measures.

citing clearer skies and a reduction in respiratory diseases. The board will continue working with state agencies to permanently reduce pollution levels in Meghalaya.
