Arunachal Tribal Leader Reiterates Claims of Chinese Encroachment, Demands Action from Centre

The tribal leader publicly stated that China has encroached into Indian territory in certain border areas. He highlighted reports from local residents and border personnel indicating unauthorized movements beyond the Line of Actual Control (LAC).

In a statement, he urged the Ministry of Defence and the Ministry of Home Affairs to enhance security, deploy additional troops, and take stringent measures to halt the encroachment. He also demanded accelerated diplomatic efforts to resolve the border dispute.

The central government has previously expressed concern over border security in the region, but no specific operational steps have been announced publicly. Experts believe that rising tensions could affect the strategic balance in the Northeast, making the leader's call for swift action even more pressing.

Arunachal Pradesh's local administration assured cooperation with security agencies and close monitoring of the situation. The leader's appeal is increasing pressure on New Delhi to provide a concrete response to any violation of Indian sovereignty.

Both sides have reiterated their positions on the border, while the international community has appealed for dialogue and restraint.

Arunachal Groups Demand Immediate Action from Centre After Exposing Chinese Infiltration

In Arunachal Pradesh, multiple civic organisations and local bodies have written to the Home Ministry, urging immediate action following a statement by the Indian-Tibetan Border Police (ITBP) chief. The ITBP chief alleged that Chinese forces have repeatedly infiltrated the state's border. The groups argue that such incursions threaten regional security and call for strengthened patrols, surveillance and diplomatic measures. They request that the centre prioritise the issue and respond swiftly in coordination with the Indian Army. The appeal comes amid escalating tensions on the India-China border and heightened local concern for safety. The government has yet to issue an official response, but the groups will continue monitoring the situation and demand concrete steps.

Factly: Viral Video of Lt. Gen. Katiyar on China's Invasion in Arunachal is AI-Generated

A viral video on social media shows retired Lt. Gen. Manoj Kumar Katiyar voicing concern over China's military incursion in Arunachal Pradesh, but Factly has confirmed that the clip is fabricated. The fact-checking organisation verified that the video was AI-manipulated and does not represent the general's real statements.

The content gained significant traction, spreading misinformation about the security situation in the border region. Factly's analysis revealed that the video was created using artificial intelligence tools, making the general's voice and appearance appear authentic.

Experts advised the public to verify such sensitive geopolitical claims through official channels before sharing. The incident highlights the growing challenge of deep-fake technology in disseminating misleading information on national security matters.

Congress seeks clarification from Reijju on Arunachal SUMP project

Congress has expressed concern in the Lok Sabha, demanding clarification from Reijju regarding its silence on the Arunachal State Urban Management Project (SUMP). The party has asked the minister to clarify the project's progress, sources of funding, and implementation timeline. SUMP is a flagship initiative aimed at improving urban infrastructure and governance in Arunachal Pradesh. The central government has presented a comprehensive framework, but details regarding resource allocation and participation of state agencies remain unclear. Congress leaders argue that transparency is essential for the project's success and have requested a detailed update from the minister. They also demanded the formation of a joint parliamentary committee to monitor implementation and ensure accountability. Reijju has yet to respond to these questions, prompting the opposition to intensify scrutiny of the project's management. The issue has become a key point in the ongoing debate over the state's development priorities.

Geothermal Drying Facility Launched in Arunachal Pradesh to Prevent Food Waste

The Arunachal Pradesh government has inaugurated an innovative geothermal energy-powered drying facility. This infrastructure is designed to reduce post-harvest crop losses in the region. By utilizing geothermal energy, the facility aims to provide a sustainable and efficient method for drying crops, thereby extending their shelf life and reducing waste. The facility is expected to benefit local farmers by increasing the value of their produce and ensuring a more stable food supply.

Arunachal Pradesh's 'Philosophy of Sufficiency': Buddhism, Nature, and Living Weaving Traditions

The article explains how the Buddhist teachings of "sufficiency" in Arunachal Pradesh are intertwined with local ecological values. This philosophy inspires people to live within natural limits while preserving their cultural identity.

At the heart of this narrative is the vibrant weaving tradition of tribal artisans, who utilize locally sourced fibers such as cotton, silk, and bamboo. Their handloom work is considered sustainable, as the seasonal harvesting of raw materials and the use of natural dyes reflect the Buddhist sentiment against excess.

By interlinking religion, nature, and craftsmanship, the article presents a holistic model where spiritual thought, environmental stewardship, and cultural heritage reinforce one another, offering a potential example for sustainable living in the Himalayan region.

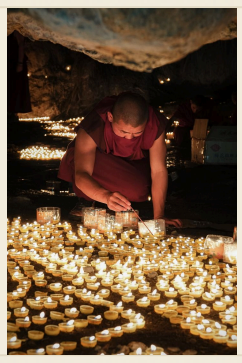

Congress criticises the silence on the Siang dam project, blames Gao for its support

Congress leaders questioned the silence of Arunachal Pradesh BJP Chief Minister Pema Khandu on the Siang dam project and demanded a clear response. At the same time, Congress criticised Gao for supporting the controversial project, stating that his support highlights a lack of accountability in the government. The Siang dam, to be built on the Siang River, is facing opposition from environmental groups and local communities. Critics say the project could threaten biodiversity and displace indigenous peoples. Congress has called for a transparent review of the project and appealed to the government to disclose all studies and consultations.

Buddhist Life Stories in Tibetan Opera-Dance at Sacred Relic Festival in Tawang

The Tibetan Institute of Performing Arts (TIPA) staged a traditional Tibetan opera-dance depicting the major events in the life of the Buddha. The performance was held as part of the Sacred Relic Festival in Tawang, Arunachal Pradesh.

The play featured a synthesis of classical Tibetan music, dance, and mask art, vividly presenting significant moments such as the Buddha's birth, enlightenment, and first sermon. The performers were dressed in traditional attire, aiming to reflect the spiritual significance of the revered relics.

The Central Tibetan Administration, acting as the festival coordinator, described the program as a means to preserve Tibetan cultural heritage and strengthen religious sentiments among locals and pilgrims.

Officials also noted that the opera-dance added a spiritual dimension to the relic festival, offering audiences the opportunity to experience Buddhist teachings in an immersive artistic form.

The event is expected to attract both the Tibetan diaspora and Indian tourists, further cementing Tawang's importance as a Buddhist pilgrimage site.

Arunachal Governor Appeals to Go Beyond Books and Avoid Narcotics

The Governor of Arunachal Pradesh has appealed to all stakeholders to adopt a new perspective on education, urging them to look beyond traditional textbooks and focus on holistic learning. In a recent address, the Governor argued that true education is not merely about rote learning but about character building and the development of practical skills.

On the same occasion, the Governor issued a stern message regarding the growing issue of drug abuse in the state. He warned that this social evil poses a serious threat to the youth and the overall development of the region.

The administration has reiterated its commitment to addressing these challenges through targeted initiatives. The Governor's remarks aim to guide policy and public discourse toward building a healthy and educated society in Arunachal Pradesh.

Protests Erupt in Mepso, Arunachal Pradesh, Over Proposed Military Ammunition Depot

In Mepso, a small town in Arunachal Pradesh, local residents have protested against a proposed military ammunition depot, causing tensions to rise in the area.

The Indian Army had planned to establish the depot in the region, citing its necessity from a national security perspective. However, locals have expressed concerns regarding security risks and environmental impact.

The Army maintains that the depot will strengthen the country's defense, but due to the protests, the state government has decided to reconsider the project's feasibility.

Currently, the proposal will only proceed after further consultations and discussions.

Five New Species of Small Horned Frogs Discovered in Arunachal Pradesh

A recent scientific survey in the remote forests of Arunachal Pradesh has led to the discovery of five new species of small horned frogs, known for the distinct bony projections on their heads. Reported by The Hindu, this discovery adds a new chapter to the amphibian diversity of the Eastern Himalayas and re-establishes the state as a biodiversity hotspot.

These new frogs are significantly smaller than their known counterparts, hence the descriptor "small" in regional notes. The specimens were collected from high-altitude streams and leaf-litter habitats, which had been studied very little due to the difficult terrain.

Scientists believe this discovery highlights the existence of many unknown species in the region and underscores the need for continued taxonomic research. It also serves as a signal for conservation efforts to protect these fragile habitats from deforestation and climate change.

The formal description of these five species will be published in an upcoming peer-reviewed journal, including their physical characteristics and genetic analysis, which will distinguish them from known horned frog species.

Conservationists hope that this new information will draw greater attention to the ecological importance of Arunachal Pradesh's forest regions and secure additional funding for biodiversity surveys.

Vajiram & Ravi Report New Begonia Species: Begonia siangensis

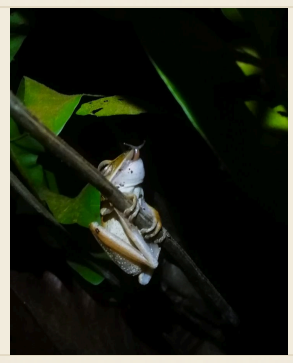

Vajiram & Ravi, a prominent Indian legal firm, has announced the identification of a new Begonia species, Begonia siangensis. This brief notice marks the first public mention of the plant, indicating that botanists have distinguished it from other Begonia species.

The naming of Begonia siangensis adds another entry to India's rich botanical diversity. While no details were provided regarding its habitat, size, or conservation status, the discovery may spark interest among botanists and conservation experts.

The firm did not provide detailed information about the circumstances of the discovery, but it officially confirms that the species is now recorded in the scientific literature. Further research and field studies are expected to yield more information about the plant's characteristics and environmental significance.

New Snail-Eating Frog Species Found in Arunachal Pradesh

A team of frog experts conducting a biodiversity survey in the Eastern Himalayan regions of Arunachal Pradesh has identified a new frog species that primarily feeds on land snails. The specimen was collected from a humid, leaf-covered stream bank and has been provisionally described as a new species pending formal classification.

While most amphibians in India are insectivores or small invertebrate eaters, this frog's specific diet sets it apart. Preliminary observations indicate that its jaw structure and digestive enzymes are capable of breaking down and digesting the hard shells of snails, a trait rare among amphibians in the region.

Scientists view this discovery as evidence of Arunachal Pradesh's rich but understudied biodiversity and emphasize the importance of conserving its forest ecosystems. Further research is planned to understand the species' distribution, conservation status, and ecological role.

FAC grants Phase-I forest clearance to Naying 1,000 MW hydroelectric project amid Siang protests

New Delhi – The Forest Advisory Committee (FAC) has recommended Phase-I forest clearance for the Naying hydroelectric project located in the Siang basin of Arunachal Pradesh. This is an initial step required for detailed design and financial closure of the 1,000 MW capacity scheme.

local communities and environmental groups in the Siang area continued their protests, expressing concerns over displacement, loss of forest cover and potential impacts on river ecology. FAC acknowledged these issues but cited mitigation measures such as afforestation, compensation for affected families, and a biodiversity management plan.

If the Ministry of Environment, Forest and Climate Change approves the recommendation, the project developers will be able to proceed with land acquisition and construction. The Naying project is part of the state's broader plan to increase hydroelectric capacity and reduce reliance on fossil fuels.

Stakeholders say the decision could set a precedent for large hydroelectric projects in the sensitive northeastern region in the future.

The government has not yet taken a final decision, and protests are likely to continue until local residents receive clear assurances.

China begins fishing in Arunachal Pradesh waters amid dam protests

China has begun fishing operations in the waters of Arunachal Pradesh, a region claimed by India but administered by China. This move comes amid ongoing protests against the dam project on the Lohit River, where local communities and Indian officials have expressed concerns over environmental impact and sovereignty. Indian authorities have described the fishing as a violation of Indian jurisdiction and have urged China to respect the region's sovereignty. China has yet to issue a formal statement, but has continued patrolling the area, citing historical fishing rights.

ANSU and ANYA launch indefinite economic blockade in Bulukpong

The Arunachal Students Union (ANSU) and the Arunachal Nyishi Youth Association (ANYA) announced on Thursday the launch of an indefinite economic blockade in Bulukpong and Nikipu. This action was taken following violent incidents that both organizations described as attacks on members of the Nyishi community, and they have demanded immediate action.

Protesters have blocked the main road connecting Bulukpong to the rest of the state, halting the flow of goods and public transport. Local traders have complained of shortages of essential items, while police have been deployed to prevent the situation from deteriorating.

Both ANSU and ANYA have demanded that the state government investigate the attacks, provide security measures for the Nyishi community, and engage in dialogue with tribal representatives. They stated that the blockade will continue until their demands are met, prioritizing the safety of the community.

The state administration has not yet issued an official response, but officials said they are in contact with the protesters and are assessing the security situation on the ground.
