Magnitude 4.9 earthquake strikes Sikkim-Nepal border

A magnitude 4.9 earthquake was recorded in the area along the border between Sikkim, India, and neighboring Nepal, according to Pratinidhi Times. Light tremors were felt in several settlements near the border, and local authorities issued an advisory urging caution.

The Himalayan region, which includes Sikkim, is prone to continuous seismic activity due to the collision of the Indian and Eurasian tectonic plates. Scientists keep such moderate-magnitude earthquakes under constant surveillance, as they can indicate tectonic stress.

As of the time of reporting, official sources have not confirmed any casualties or property damage. Emergency services are on standby to assess potential impacts, and surveys will continue for further updates.

Chinese aircraft entered Indian airspace over Sikkim and was held for 20 minutes

According to a media report, a Chinese military aircraft entered Indian airspace over the northeastern state of Sikkim. It is said that the aircraft stayed in the area for about twenty minutes before returning. The report states that the Indian Air Force and the central government have not yet confirmed the violation and no official statement has been issued. Indian defence officials typically investigate such cases through radar records and flight data, but no investigation details have been made public at present. If the incident is confirmed, it would add another example to the recent air skirmishes along the India-China border, underscoring the sensitivity of the region. Further information will be released after officials assess the situation.

Chinese aircraft entered Indian airspace over Sikkim and ignored warnings for 25 minutes

DNA India reports that a Chinese aircraft entered Indian airspace over the Himalayan state of Sikkim. Despite multiple warnings from Indian authorities, the aircraft remained on its course for 25 minutes. This incident highlights the growing tension in the disputed border areas. Earlier similar air violations have been reported in the region, and the duration this time underscored the difficulties of aerial surveillance in mountainous terrain. No detailed information about the aircraft type or altitude has been released. The incident occurred amid heightened vigilance on both sides of the Line of Actual Control (LAC), where both countries maintain robust military deployments. Experts believe that such air violations, if left unaddressed, could increase the risk of misunderstandings. The Indian government has yet to issue an official statement on the violation.

Sikkim High Court quashes criminal case over Darjeeling-Sikkim unification talks

On Tuesday, the Sikkim High Court quashed a criminal case related to discussions regarding the potential unification of Darjeeling and Sikkim. The court stated that the issue is part of a political and constitutional debate, not a criminal offense.

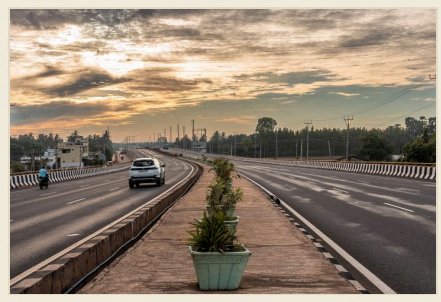

The case arose after police charged several activists and local leaders under the Indian Penal Code for organizing a meeting on the possibility of merging parts of Darjeeling with Sikkim.

In its ruling, the court emphasized the protection of freedom of expression and democratic discourse on constitutional issues. It was held that discussing a political proposal cannot be considered criminal unless it incites violence or illegal activity.

Legal experts welcomed the decision, noting that it reinforces the judiciary’s role in protecting political discourse. The order may have implications for similar cases related to regional autonomy movements in other states.

The court did not comment on the validity of the unification proposal, allowing the political debate to continue on the public platform.
